TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE

Compiled by National Master Zhongfeng (1263–1323 C.E.), this liturgy provides a holistic practice that combines Pure Land and Chan (Zen, meditation). While many Western Buddhists, through exposure to other traditions of Buddhism, see Pure Land and Chan as separate or even complete opposites, this liturgy is a prime example of how the two teachings can be integrated and practiced together. Although the teachings delivered in the liturgy urge the audience to seek rebirth in the Pure Land, its ideas and concepts are rooted in Chan, emphasizing the non-duality of sentient beings and the Buddha.

This liturgy is used exclusively for memorial services. Thus, the deceased are considered spiritually present through yellow paper plaques which have their names inscribed. Throughout the service, the sermons delivered by the officiant address the deceased spirits who are being memorialized with the understanding that they are gathered here, respectfully listening to the teachings. However, living participants of the service should strive to learn from the teachings as well. By practicing mindfulness of the Buddha, developing a better understanding of the Dharma, and purifying one's own karma through repentance and reform, the living participants are able to generate wholesome causes and conditions which benefit all beings—both the living and the deceased.

The service begins by purifying the Main Shrine with incense and paying respects to the Buddha. Then, at the Memorial Altar, the officiant announces to the deceased that the service is starting and urges them to cherish this rare and extraordinary opportunity to learn the Dharma. Finally, after a second offering of incense at the Main Shrine, the first of the three sessions begins.

The main service is conducted in three sessions which share the same structure, with each session encompassing core Mahāyāna Buddhist practices such as sūtra recitation, mindfulness of the Buddha, praise and veneration, prostrations, repentance, and making vows. The three sessions were originally done in the three periods of the morning, noon, and afternoon, and this is the origin of the liturgy's name. However, it is now typical to conduct all three in one afternoon. Aside from the practice component, the majority of the text is comprised of teachings delivered by the presiding officiant. These urge the assembly—both the living and the deceased—to generate faith in Amitābha Buddha's Pure Land of Ultimate Bliss, practice the necessary virtues, and vow to be reborn in his Pure Land. It also presents a Chan perspective on the Pure Land, teaching that "nothing is outside of the Pure Land of one's own mind, nor the Amitābha of one's inherent nature."

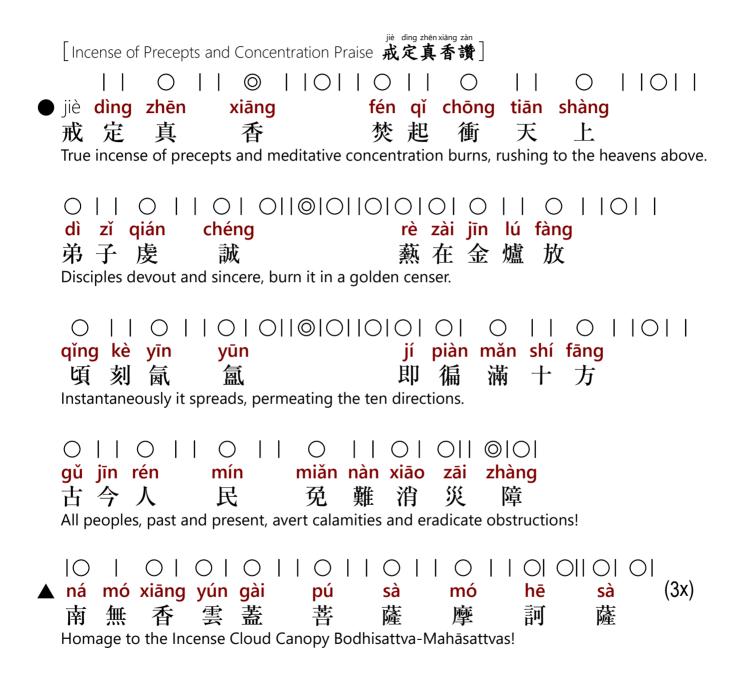

This liturgy provides the original Chinese, transliteration to chant along, and the translated meaning. Please read along during the service. Being a profound text, there is always benefit in reading and rereading the teachings, so even those who have participated in the service many times before will be able to gain new realizations with each reading.

In Commemoration of Amitābha Buddha's Birthday, Winter 2019
